The Evil of the involuntary human experimentation □

“The Evil was always there and persist because good men and women do nothing to stop it”.

The European Continent citizens have access to adequate information about the violations of the Human Rights of those which, involuntarily, either, become human guinea pigs, or, their internal organs/tissues become harvested.

The victims of those atrocities, for obvious reasons, they either, become murdered, or, they become enslaved and tortured, for the rest of their lives.

The Europeans, by remaining indifferent for the unjust suffering of so many, innocent human beings, they, indirectly, make, the potential violations of their own Human Rights, becoming moral ones.

Within our barbaric world, in the History of which so many remorseless genocides having been committed, is there any chance for the Europeans' Human Rights not to become, morally, violated by the colonialists of our days?

P.S.: It seems like being easy, for one, to pretend that he is ignorant, for his fellow human beings' sufferings, and turn his face the other way; though, sooner or later, that pretense may lead to, the least, unpleasant, involuntary capitalization, either of his own life, or, deprivation, of his own freedom. The existence of innocent victims of those atrocities, which may be persecuted endlessly and which may be mistreated intermittently, by organized crime and by corrupted State authorities, dooms the fate of the Europeans, inescapably. One's letting defenseless children becoming degraded to mere meat for their organs/tissues to become traded for money, is something which has dire, long term consequences upon the one's life. Isn't it so?

Appendix

Established that it was accepted practice not only for hospitals to remove organs without parental consent but also to trade in them for profit – in short, to sell them. In January 2000 a reporter for the Independent reported that healthy thymus glands removed from children during heart surgery without parental consent, were sold to Aventis Pasteur “for research on a drug treatment for aplastic anaemia,” in return for a ten-pound donation to the hospital's cardiac department for each gland received. Indeed, a quick check with other British hospitals suggested that such practices were common: “Birmingham Children's Hospital admitted it had given organs to drug companies in the early 1990s in return for cash” (Laurance 2001, 2). As the shadow health secretary Dr. Liam Fox explained: “What we are effectively talking about here is cash for organs... It brings any ethical issues into play here, and I think we need to know the full details... because if it has happened in Alder Hey we have to ask if it has happened elsewhere.”

Alder Hey organs scandal

In an undercover video released Wednesday, a former technician for a tissue-harvesting company details how an aborted baby was kept alive so that its heart could be harvested at a California Planned Parenthood facility, raising more legal questions about the group's practices.

Furthermore, it emerged that Birmingham Children's Hospital and Alder Hey Children's Hospital in Liverpool had also given thymus glands, removed from live children during heart surgery, to a pharmaceutical company for research in return for financial donations. Alder Hey also stored without consent 1,500 fetuses that were miscarried, stillborn or aborted.

Artificial Thymus

Many artificial organs are being developed as an alternative to donated organs, which are only temporary solutions that require the recipients to maintain a lifetime regiment of medications.

With recent advancements in biomedical technologies, the time may be coming when those who require transplants no longer need to wait on donation lists to replace organs like kidneys and blood vessels. And now, scientists have added the thymus to the list of body parts we can artificially simulate.

The thymus is a gland that is essential to your immune system. T cells, a type of white blood cell that helps to get rid of viruses, bacterial infections, and cancer cells, mature within this gland. When people get sick (or as they age), the thymus becomes worse at its job. In some cases, people with different types of cancer are not getting the biological support and help they need from their T cells.

Now, there are adoptive T cell immunotherapy treatments which involve removing T cells from a patient, “fixing” them, and transfusing them back. But these treatments depend on the patient actually having enough of these cells, and many do not. This type of treatment also takes a very long time to complete.

To create a more sustainable and effective solution to this serious medical issue, researchers at UCLA created artificial thymic organoids that create T cells from blood stem cells. This was an incredible feat in medical science — but could these artificial structures create specialized T cells that have cancer-fighting receptors? Yes.

Life Saving

The team inserted a Gene for cancer-fighting receptors into blood stem cells. This caused the organoids to produce only cancer-specific T cells. Because other types of T cells could accidentally target and attack healthy tissue, these results are exceptionally positive. If specific T cells can be created and other types turned off, cancer cells can be targeted and attacked without causing autoimmunity problems.

The researchers published their work in Nature Methods and are now investigating this technique with pluripotent stem cells. This could allow for the creation of a more sustainable supply of these life-saving cells. The team is calling on other scientists to reproduce its work.

This new development could be one large step towards reducing the costs of cancer treatments. It is no secret that most modern cancer treatments are either extremely costly, dangerous to healthy tissues, not effective enough, or a combination of these. There are many treatments that successfully put patients into remission and allow them to continue on with healthy and fulfilled lives. But, there is still a lot of room for improvement, and this could be one of them.

Although this patented artificial structure will have to go through years of clinical trials before it can be widely adapted by the medical community, and it has not been tested in humans yet, it holds promise as a way to guarantee the creation of healthy cancer-targeted T cells. The availability of treatment may not depend on a patient's existing cells that must be removed and engineered. Instead, patients of varying levels of illness could have equal access to treatment — and to hope.

History of Experimentation on Human Guinea Pigs

1932 to 1972 – In the infamous Tuskegee syphilis study, 200 black men diagnosed with syphilis are never told of their illness, are denied treatment. They are used as human guinea pigs in order to follow the progression and symptoms of the disease. They all subsequently die from syphilis, their families never told that they could have been treated. The study continues for four decades. (MSNBC , Time Magazine , Wikipedia)

1939 – At an orphanage in Iowa, 22 children are the subjects of the so-called "monster" experiment, which attempts to use psychological abuse to induce children who spoke normally to stutter. The experiment is designed by Dr. Wendell Johnson, one of the nation's most prominent speech pathologists, for the purpose of testing one of his theories on the cause of stuttering. 1960 to 1971 – Dr. Eugene Saenger, funded by the Defense Atomic Support Agency, performs whole body radiation experiments on more than 90 poor, black Americans. He forges consent forms, and does not tell them what he is doing (they think they are receiving medical care). He exposes their chests to the equivalent of about 7,500 x-rays, which cause intense pain, vomiting, and bleeding from their nose and ears. At least eight, and as many as 20 of the subjects die as a result. (Los Angeles Times , New York Times)

1963 – The CIA Inspector General completes a report on the MKULTRA program stating, "A final phase of testing of MKULTRA products places the rights and interests of U.S. citizens in jeopardy.
