A Soviet Cosmonaut – The Sacredness Of The Human Life

The human-life is sacred and invaluable.

However, the more, the human empathy is being suppressed by external, artificial means, the more, the human-civilization becomes defeated, the less, this sacredness can be comprehended.

The human-life is not garbage to throwaway just for looting some material wealth, of any size.

The way that, the human-life is being treated, becomes, holistic and holographic, properties; we see evidence of this within contemporary, large populations.

As time passes by, the international community shall, more and more, realize that, a humane and civilized, collective future can best be secured through becoming, honestly and willingly, associated with, the Germans, the Irish, the Paraguayans, and the Greeks.
